Alternative Care and Chiropractic Care Benefits

There's clearly a strong—and growing—interest in complementary and alternative care, including chiropractic, naturopathic, and acupuncture treatment. A 2004 joint study by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and the National Center for Complementary and Alternative Medicine found that 36 percent of adults in the U.S. had used these services in the past year. Over half of those people did so because they believed complementary and alternative care, when used in combination with conventional medical treatments, would improve their health.

Because we understand how highly consumers value these services, we have designed our group health plans to include integrated coverage for specific alternative therapies.
